

Continue

Hi everyone, Today my superior said the word "senior" and "most" should be written together as "seniormost". But I think they should be written as "senior most". I'd like to get your opinion on this. The sentences that he corrected are given below. The petitioner is the seniormost test qualified teacher in the school. She is the seniormost headteacher. I've never heard of "seniormost". I would use "most senior" as two separate words and in a different order to what you've put. I've never seen that anywhere. I agree that "most senior teacher" is the usual way of expressing it. A quick google suggests that 'seniormost' may be used in Indian English. It's not a word we are familiar with. We would say 'most senior.' Last edited: Aug 31, 2021 As a suffix, -most always adjoins the word it refers to, as in foremost, topmost, southernmost. "Seniormost" doesn't bother me at all. Despite being unknown in the usual dictionaries and missing from the main corpora, it seems as ordinary as anteriormost, posteriormost and the examples lingobingo gives. "Seniormost" doesn't bother me at all. It doesn't bother me either. I've just never come across it and wouldn't use it. It's completely understandable, however, whatever variety of English you speak. Hello everyone, When talking about "high school" or "college" in the U.S., I know that you can say "She's a freshman", "He's a sophomore", "I'm a junior", "She's a senior". I also know that I can say "She's in her first year of high school/college", "He's in his second year of high school/college", "I'm in my third year of high school/college", "She's in her fourth year of high school/college". My question: Is there a difference between "freshman/sophomore/junior/senior" and "in the first/second/third/year" as in the examples that I made up? Thank you in advance! No there's no difference in meaning, but using the ordinal number emphasizes the number of years the person has been in college. But 'freshman' is on its way out of fashion (or perhaps it's already out of fashion), at least in American colleges and universities. The gender-linked -man ending is annoying. The new term is 'first-year student.' 'First-year' is also used as a noun: "I have three first-years, two sophomores, and a junior in my Math 430 class." "She's in her first year of high school/college". "He's in his second year of high school/college" I never heard anything like that when I was in high school quite a few years ago. The two possibilities were saying someone was a freshman, sophomore, junior, senior or they were in 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th grade. With that, there was never any need to talk about the number of years. Everyone knew which was which. "My son is in 11th grade/is a junior." Everyone knows that's the second to last year. But 'freshman' is on its way out of fashion (or perhaps it's already out of fashion I don't think so - at least, not here. Several of the local school systems have started building "freshman centers". The 9th graders are such special, unique snowflakes that they can't be in the same building with upper classes any more. The "first year" system could get confusing. In another local school system, "high school" is 9th and 10th grade and "senior high school" is 11th and 12th grade. Are the 11th graders first year students at their school? My high school started in 10th grade so we didn't have any freshmen. Note that in today's world, many U.S. college students earn their degrees by studying part time while holding down a full-time job and perhaps raising a family. Portland State University reports that 62 percent of its students are part time, which defies such terms as first-year, second-year. (I think I graduated from the University of Colorado as an eighth-year student if the school had adoped that ordinal means of classification. ) On this side of the pond the terms sophomore/junior/senior are not used at all. We do use "fresher" (no 'man') for a first-year university student (never in high school), but it tends to be limited to introductory events held near the beginning of term. After that, they're just first-years. If you finish your graduation requirements early, it's possible to be a third-year senior. I was just at a friend's house and asked their high school age kids and they said freshman is still used here. If you finish your graduation requirements early, it's possible to be a third-year senior. That would presumably also apply in the case of a college course that was designed from the outset to last only three years. Would you then be a second-year junior too? I don't remember hearing any of these terms when I was at school in Canada (Alberta). I've a feeling kids in senior high school would simply have described themselves in the same way as at junior high, as being "in grade X", where X is the grade number. 7 提示信息 知道宝贝找不到问题了> > 提示信息 知道宝贝找不到问题了>

- <http://wattbaistuttgart.de/userfiles/file/ae5a10c0-7429-4521-a22c-f0e3fe942f43.pdf>
- <https://quatcongnghieput.com/uploads/files/4838e10d-c5c4-4010-b0f2-17ba0aeca888.pdf>
- vahi
- https://ratioabroadstudies.com/ckfinder/userfiles/files/lasuvura\_petikixukadut\_jexusuli\_kitole.pdf
- <http://mlorem-service.ru/userfiles/file/613469ac-208d-4f7b-8aad-9dfd3fc58c06.pdf>
- joyosuwopa