Female Authors with gender neutral names u/Cornflower Bumblebee Female Authors with gender neutral names This is a silly request but my grandfather, an avid reader, asked for books for Christmas. He also declared he wont read anymore books written by women because they are too gossipy. He said this in a room filled with his four daughters and numerous granddaughters. We want to prank him by getting him books by female authors that arent obviously female (gender neutral names, initials, or pen names). Obviously, he could figure it out if he reads the About the Author section but we doubt he will do that. He enjoys non-fiction, especially American history, as well as thrillers like the books by Robert Ludlum. EDITED to add pen names to the list! I was gifted and only ever read two new, thick, hardcover prequel books (perhaps 300-400 pages each) in the early 00s. Its a high fantasy series at adult-reading level. The first prequel novel is about a man, who becomes a father, and lives as a recluse with his two daughters. The second prequel novel is about his daughters. I think both of these hardcover prequels had the main character on the front cover, perhaps with a wild, rustic country backdrop. One of the daughters (I think her name started with B) lives a mortal life, and begets the first blond son in a lineage of blond boys, which eventually leads to a chosen boy. The second daughter is a witch (I think her name started with a P), and lives for hundreds of years, and she is marvellously clever and a good singer (I distinctly remember a scene where she was performing, and could split her voice and sing multiple notes at once). This second daughter watches over the lineage of blond-headed boys from afar (her nephews, many times removed), and waits for the chosen boy to finally be born, so she (and I think her father, too) can go to find him and tell him of his destiny. I think this is where the prequels ended, and the original series of books would have started from that point, but I never read on further. Thank you for your ideas!
