Sir Keir Starmer has been warned that the UK is a 'powder keg' that could explode into a repeat of the street violence that followed the Southport murders 12 months ago - unless Labour urgently gets a grip on migrant hotels. It came as his deputy prime minister, Angela Rayner, warned that anger at high levels of illegal immigration is risking social cohesion in Britain's poorest communities and must be addressed. The Park Hotel, in Diss, Norfolk, last night became the centre of another anti-migrant protest following a string of violent demonstrations in Epping, Essex, with more action planned across the country over the weekend. More than a million Britons are now injecting themselves weekly with drugs like Mounjaro and Wegovy lured by promises of rapid results. The Duchess of Sussex has 'had everything going for her' but the viewing figures for With Love, Meghan have still been 'dismal', an insider at the streamer reportedly said. BAFTA-winning actress Sarah Lancashire was among those honoured at Windsor Castle on Tuesday as she became a Commander of the Order of the British Empire (CBE). Lancashire, 60, attended the investiture ceremony with family members, among them proud husband Peter Salmon, after she was made a CBE for services to drama in the New Year Honours. The actress wore an elegant powder pink outfit for her meeting with Anne, Princess Royal at the Berkshire residence. Stephanie is currently on holiday in Fuerteventura in Las Palmas and in true British fashion, she woke up at the crack of dawn to ensure she secured deck chairs for the day. The mother-of-six - who is from Wales - said that she has a 'big family' and so needed to reserve several loungers for them alongside the resort's pool. She told her TikTok account : 'First things first, we have to claim our sunbeds at the pool area. We have come as a big family so we have to be there early.' However, instead of spending the sunrise soaking up the Spanish rays, she decided to take her brood out for breakfast and a shopping trip instead, while their towels remained on the sunbeds. The TV presenter, 65, found love with Katie (right), 43, following his divorce from Ruth (left and inset), 65, in May 2024, when they split after 14 years of marriage and two decades together. Mike Lynch's estate is now effectively bankrupt after being told to pay Hewlett Packard 700million in a court case over the late British tycoon's former company. A judge in London said HP was owed the money from the estate of Mr Lynch and his former business partner over its acquisition of their software firm Autonomy. HP is trying to recoup its losses from Dr Lynch - who died a year ago when his luxury yacht sank off Sicily - and Autonomy's ex-chief financial officer Sushovan Hussain. The High Court ruling comes after seven people died in the Bayesian disaster on August 19 last year including billionaire Dr Lynch, 59, and his daughter Hannah, 18. It means Dr Lynch would be expected to pass nothing to his widow Angela Bacares - who survived the disaster - and surviving daughter Esme, unless there is an appeal. Filled with laughter, the clip shows the future King walking hand-in-hand with his sister and brother, while another adorable moment sees the two eldest royal children lift up the beaming youngest. The joyous footage was captured behind-the-scenes of George's birthday photoshoot, which took place earlier this year in Norfolk. Earlier today, Kensington Palaces shared the new charming photograph of the young prince to celebrate his special day. Looking as angelic as ever, George, who was born on July 22, 2013 at St Mary's Hospital in Paddington, London , was all smiles as he posed for the picture in the British countryside. Ashleigh Wilson, 26, shared a video of her lunch which she promises to satisfy her appetite and 'will not be going to that snack cupboard' later. The Blackpool local had once weighed 15 stone 8 pounds but felt her trick would keep her 'sickly full' until dinner. Ms Wilson had been tracking her weight-loss journey on TikTok and what food she eats to reach her goals. Published: 00:08 BST, 22 July 2025 | Updated: 07:09 BST, 22 July 2025 Britain is on the brink of 'societal collapse', Nigel Farage warned as he vowed to halve crime in five years if he becomes prime minister. Reform's leader claimed people were scared to go to the shops and tourists were staying away from London as a result of soaring muggings and brazen shoplifting. He also claimed the country was close to 'civil disobedience on a vast scale' as a result of alleged crimes by migrants. Mr Farage defended those protesting outside an Epping hotel housing asylum seekers as 'genuinely concerned families' and blamed 'some bad eggs' for the violent clashes with police. Reform's plan to restore law and order, costing an estimated 17.4 billion over the course of the next parliament, would include recruiting 30,000 more police officers and creating 12,400 extra places in five 'Nightingale prisons' built on MoD land. Derelict council buildings and mothballed police stations would be used to make 100 'pop-up' custody centres and 50 courts would be reopened for 'fast-track' trials. Under a 'zero-tolerance' approach modelled on that pioneered in New York, officers would have to investigate every reported offence including shoplifting and mobile phone theft. Military veterans would be sought to bring about the return of 'big strapping' bobbies on the beat whom criminals fear. Nigel Farage warned that Britain is on the brink of 'societal collapse' and vowed to halve crime in five years if he is voted into Downing Street. Mr Farage defended those protesting outside an Epping hotel housing asylum seekers as 'genuinely concerned families' and blamed 'some bad eggs' for the violent clashes with police. Protestors were seen outside the hotel near Essex on Sunday scuffling with police in the area. To deal with repeat offenders, Mr Farage said those who committed three or more crimes would face life sentences. And the 10,000 foreign prisoners currently serving time in English jails would be deported, with the Reform leader claiming he was already in talks with Albanian prime minister Edi Rama about taking back his country's criminals. Launching a six-week policy blitz on tackling 'lawless Britain', Mr Farage said yesterday: 'We're actually facing, in many parts of our country, nothing short of societal collapse. People are scared to go out to the shops, scared to let their kids out. That is a society that is degraded, and it's happening very, very rapidly. Respect for those in uniform has declined massively. The criminals don't particularly respect the police and they're acting in many cases with total impunity. Just as worrying, if not more so, is huge numbers of law-abiding tax-paying Britons have also lost respect for the police in a different way. The idea, the concept that we're living in a system of two-tier policing and two-tier justice under two-tier Keir has really taken hold.' Mr Farage said residents were fleeing the capital as a result of soaring crime, and tourists were reluctant to visit as shoplifting and smoking cannabis become increasingly tolerated. To deal with repeat offenders, Mr Farage said those who committed three or more crimes would face life sentences. Mr Farage said the 10,000 foreign prisoners currently serving time in English jails would be deported and claimed he was already in talks with Albanian prime minister Edi Rama (left) about taking back his country's criminals. Read More He said the UK needed to copy the 'broken windows' theory popularised by New York mayor Rudy Giuliani in the 1990s, under which crime rates fell after police targeted everything from graffiti to fare-dodging. 'Reform will be the toughest party on law and order and on crime that this country has ever seen,' Mr Farage vowed. 'We will aim to cut crime by half in the first five years of a Reform government. We will take back control of our streets. We will take back control of our courts, of our prisons. Reform produced a document putting a 17.4 billion price tag on its plan over five years, but which also claimed 'the cost of our policies will likely pay for itself' because of the cost of crime to society. But opponents claimed his blueprint would cost at least 5 billion more, with Tory MP Chris Philp saying: 'Nigel Farage is writing his own crime fiction.' Their own document admits it is unfunded which means they are not being honest about the price you will pay for their policies, just like Labour.' The Reform leader said the UK needed to copy the 'broken windows' theory popularised by New York mayor Rudy Giuliani (above) in the 1990s, under which crime rates fell after police targeted everything from graffiti to fare-dodging. Tory MP Chris Philp (above) said Mr Farage 'is writing his own crime fiction' and said the Reform leader was being dishonest. Read More Mr Farage was asked about a series of protests outside The Bell Hotel in Epping, Essex, in the past week after an asylum seeker was charged with three counts of sexual assault. He said: 'I don't think anybody in London can understand just how close we are to civil disobedience on a vast scale in this country.' He accepted there were some 'bad eggs that turned up', including 'the usual far-right thugs', but added: 'Do I understand how people in Epping feel? You bet your life I do. Don't underestimate the simmering anger and disgust there is in this country that we are letting in every week, in fact some days, many hundreds of undocumented young males, many of whom come from cultures in which women and young girls are not even treated as second-class citizens. I do understand the genuine upset and anger, and I'll bet you that most of the people outside that hotel in Epping weren't far right or far-left or anything like that, they were genuinely concerned families.'
